

Ashley Kite-Rowland is the Partnership Coordinator for the Tennessee Division of Forestry's Urban and Community Forestry Program. Her diverse background includes over 20 years' experience in community outreach, coalition building and advocacy in both the nonprofit and government sector.

Ashley's undergraduate degree is in anthropology, and her graduate research focused on the importance of nature to children's development and how the built environment can ensure this access for all children. One of her current projects is bringing together diverse stakeholders to develop an urban and community wood utilization network in Tennessee.

Forestry

Ashley Kite-Rowland

*Partnership Coordinator;
Tennessee Division of Forestry's
Urban and Community Forestry
Programs*

